SCREEN ATTRACTIONS AT GRANADA THEATRE, LA JOLLA, ALL TOP NOTCHERS

On this Saturday, July 17, matinee and night, Wm. S. Hart, famous two-gun man, and hero of the western drama, will appear on the Granada screen at La Jolla in his first and only picture since his return to the films—"Tumble Weeds." From the pen of Hal G. Evarts, famous writer of western fiction, "Tumbleweeds" is an ideal selection for Hart, and re-establishes him on stellar firmament. Other features on the program are a comedy, scenic and Pathe Review.

Sunday and Monday, Richard Dix and Lois Wilson in "Let's Get Married," will be the feature picture. "Let's Get Married" is an adaptation of the play "The Man From Mexico," and is a fast farce comedy with Dix at his very best. An Our Gang comedy, a news reel and Mutt and Jeff will also be shown.

"A Social Celebrity," the hilariously funny screen romance of a small town barber with Adolphe Menjou and Louise Brooks, assisted by Chester Conklin in the featured roles, will be shown Tuesday and Wednesday. The picture is spiced with sophistication, rosy with romance, and is a sure tonic for the blues. Menjou as the barber-baron trims away the old grouch with his "shear" nonsense. The story is an original by Monte Katterjohn, and the picture was directed by Malcolm St. Clair. As added attractions a comedy and Fable will also be shown.

Edward Sutherland, the directing genius responsible for "Behind the Front," has made another hit in "It's the Old Army Game," which features W. C. Fields, stage comedian of note, and remembered for his work in "That Royle Girl" and "Sally on the Sawdust." "It's the Old Army Game" is a farce comedy in which the Florida real estate game has been turned inside out. Louise Brooks is the girl, and Blanche Ring (Mrs. Thomas Meighan) and Mickey Bennett appear in support. ad

CANDY SALE BY O. B. CAMPFIRE GIRLS THIS SATURDAY

By Phyllis Osborne

"I really don't see how I can go. The day set is Saturday and that is always such a big day, you know. First the house must be cleaned and—"

"But, my dear, you must go. Everybody that is someone will be there—and the candy! It is always delicious. I wouldn't miss it. The candy is so pure and really cheap, according to the prices they ask now-a-days."

"Well, I might change my mind. I have such a sweet tooth and I do appreciate good candy."

Thus ended the conversation over Mrs. Wilkins' tea table. The next day Mrs. Stuart was called to the back fence by her neighbor, Mrs. Moore. These women still gossiped over the back fence.

"Oh, Mrs. Stuart," cried Mrs. Moore, "have you heard about the Campfire candy sale? My daughter told me about it and I don't intend to miss it. I missed the last one and I certainly was sorry. It was on a Saturday and I told Jane when she asked me if I was going that I was too busy. Well, about 2 o'clock she came in and said that they were sold out. She saved a piece of every kind for me. It certainly was good and when she told me the prices I was astonished. They were so low. Well, I must go in. I just thought that I would tell you about it because I am not going to miss it and I didn't want you to," and she ran into the house to answer the telephone.

Mrs. Stuart walked into the house slowly, thinking about the sale of which everyone was talking. Just then her own telephone rang. As she answered it she recognized the voice of the minister's wife.

"Mrs. Stuart?" asked Mrs. Wilkin, "Do you intend to go to the sale on the 17th? If so, I'll stop for you."

"Yes, I believe I will go," said Mrs. Stuart.

"You'll never be sorry for it," replied Mrs. Wilkin.

* * * * * *

"Mrs. Wilkin?" queried Mrs. Stuart. It was the year after the memorable sale. "Well, did you know that the Campfire candy sale is to be held on Saturday, the seventeenth of July? Oh, if you wish, I will call for you. All right."

"Yoo-hoo," called Mrs. Stuart over her back fence, "did you hear about the Campfire sale? You know the one? Where the candy is so good and the prices are low. I'll call for you about ten. We want to get there early so as to get the nice candy."

"Oh, yes, I always buy candy at the Campfire sale," Mrs. Stuart informed her guests at dinner, "and I advise you to. The candy is very good and at a moderate rate. My, but I certainly am glad that I went to the sale last year!"

SO, WE ADVISE YOU TO TRY OUR CANDY. IT IS GOOD CANDY AND THE PRICE IS LOW. THE SALE IS ON SATURDAY, JULY 17, AND IT IS IN FRONT OF THE OCEAN BEACH DANCE PAVILION. SALE STARTS AT TEN. BE THERE EARLY!

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Answering an inquiry propounded by S. M. Chaney, superintendent of Glenn county schools, through H. W. McGowan, district attorney, word was received in Willows, a short time ago from Attorney General U. S. Webb to the effect that the office of rural supervisor of schools is mandatory. This settles a question which arose in Willows when the Glenn county unit, Federation of American Farmers circulated a petition requesting the county supervisors not only to withdraw financial support from the agricultural extension service but also to take steps toward the abolition of the office of rural supervisor. The petition was presented, and although the extension service abolition proposal was placed on the ballot, no action was taken at the last meeting of the board on the matter of rural supervisor. Any action by the board on this office is now believed barred by Webb's latest ruling.

Indicative of the ridiculousness of the claims of the Pacific Air Transport company, Seattle-Los Angeles air mail contractors that Sacramento should not be included in the schedule because of the prevalence of fog is the report of a board of three army officers made on fog conditions in Sacramento. The report was made shortly prior to the establishment of Mather Field and N. R. Taylor, meteorologist in charge of the Sacramento weather bureau, co-operated with the army men in gathering data. The report, according to Taylor, showed that the fog situation in Sacramento was the most favorable of any metropolitan location on the Pacific Coast and that there were a greater number of flying days here than at almost any point in the country.

Angle worms that escape in the night are causing anxiety to George H. Forbes, San Jose. In a letter to Director of Agriculture, G. H. Hecke, Forbes relates he has been trying to breed angleworms in his back yard with a view to supplying the demand among fish for bait from contented worms. He ventures to hope the department of agriculture will tell him why the worms leave home and what he must do to keep them well nourished and happy.

"SLIDING GHOST" MOST BAFFLING MYSTERY OF WAR

Patient in Government Hospital Can't Even Recall His Own Name.

Washington.—The case of the "Sliding Ghost" is one of the most peculiar and baffling mysteries that has followed in the wake of the great war. The "ghost," who, for want of a better name, is called Jerry Tarbot, is at the Mount Alto Veterans' hospital.

For three years the federal government has been trying to learn the real name of Jerry Tarbot. It has failed, but the veterans' bureau is convinced that the "Sliding Ghost" had a terrible war experience.

The unfortunate veteran won his unusual nickname because of his ability to wiggle through some of the most dangerous parts of wire-entangled No Man's land. He lived through some of the most terrible days of the war.

Shell Clouds Brain.

Eight years ago Tarbot's memory was almost blotted out when a great shell exploded near him in France.

A Great Shell Exploded Near Him.

From that time on, he can remember nothing about his past.

In 1923 he was found in an asylum at Stockton, Calif. How he got there he does not know, but during the interval from 1918 to 1923 he apparently wandered all over the country, even buying a barren ranch.

If Tarbot could identify himself and connect himself with a war service record somewhere in the rolls of the marine corps, he would be several thousand dollars richer.

Compensation Is Due.

He would have government compensation money for nearly eight years to which a disabled veteran is entitled. There is also a more important need for his past, he believes.

"Starting over again now, about thirty-seven years old, I can't take a place alongside the average man of my age," he says. "I must start out fresh with the young lads.

"Other men have been building up into their jobs. I don't know where I did my building. If I could go back and begin where I left off, there would not be so much toil to do over again."

WHEN I WAS TWENTY-ONE

BY JOSEPH KAYE

At Twenty-One:—Marietta Holley, Author of the Famous "Samantha" Books, Didn't Help Her Mother as Much as She Should.

"AT THE age of twenty-one my position in life was like that of any other young girl in the pleasant north country. I helped my mother in the ordinary work of the household, though not so much as I should have done, for until one has the responsibility of a home, one does not understand the care and labor it means.

"I scribbled a good deal even then; poetry—so-called—and essays on almost any subject, some, I believe, that even Shakespeare and Milton would have thought beyond a poet's range. I did a great deal, indeed everything available that came my way. I roamed over the literary hills and vales with the freedom and delight of the country born.

"So much for my outward life. As for my inner life, I dreamed the gleaming, fanciful castles that young girls exhibit both in city and country—glittering castles that, it is needless to say, were never built.

"My ambitions at that time were boundless; and so was my faith. I was going to do some great work that would revolutionize the world and would set all the wrongs to right. Nothing is easier than for youth to make over the world; nothing is easier than for youth to look through the golden haze that hangs about their future and see a world transformed; nothing is easier than for youth to view the world's weaknesses and ailings and stand serenely on a height—a conqueror.

"Alas for the dream and ambitions of youth! The long years pass and things move on about the same. And as the shadows lengthen in the west, instead of the high place and the conqueror's dream, one must sit by the common wayside and see the old world go by in the same old way.—Marietta Holley ("Josiah Allen's Wife").

Marietta Holley is one of the last surviving members of the old school of writers who used to delight our parents and grandparents. She is the author of the celebrated "Samantha" books—"Samantha Amongst the Brethren," "Samantha at Saratoga," "Samantha Among the Colored Folks," etc., and for an equally popular work of that period, "Around the World With Josiah Allen's Wife." The last "Samantha book was published in 1913, "Samantha on Women's Rights."

Miss Holley is a veteran in the cause of women's suffrage.

GIRLIGAGS

"The feminists are claiming the credit for the modern woman's freedom," says enfranchised Fannie, "but it probably was a man who invented the can-opener."

Mother's Cook Book

"The woman who has not loved, played with and spanked a child, has missed one of the cardinal joys."

MEAT EXTENDERS

A SMALL slice of mutton cut up into serving-sized pieces, browned in butter, or sweet fat, covered with boiling water and a sliced onion with two or three sliced or latticed carrots, cooked slowly for two hours on the back of the stove, will serve more persons than just one slice of mutton.

Ragout of Lamb.

Take one pound of lamb from the flank, one-half cupful of dried peas, one quart of cold water, two sliced onions, one teaspoonful of salt, three cupfuls of cubed potatoes, one cupful of diced carrots, three tablespoonfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of worcestershire sauce, two teaspoonfuls of catsup, two teaspoonfuls of chopped parsely, with pepper and paprika to taste. Pick over the peas, soak over night in cold water to cover. Wipe the meat, remove the bones and cover them with the quart of water, add the soaked peas, bring to the boiling point and simmer until the peas are tender; add salt, potato and carrot, cook until the vegetables are soft. Mix the flour with a third of a cupful of cold water, add to the stew and cook for ten minutes. Add two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice and the other seasonings and serve at once.

Roast Beef With Mexican Sauce.

Reheat rare roast beef cut into thin slices in the following sauce: Cook one onion finely chopped in two tablespoonfuls of butter five minutes. Add one red and one green pepper, one clove of garlic, all finely chopped, two tomatoes peeled and cut into pieces. Cook 15 minutes, add one teaspoonful of worcestershire sauce, one-fourth teaspoonful of celery salt and salt to taste.

Nut Tidbits.

Beat the whites of two eggs stiff, add a cupful of sugar and fold in one cupful of chopped nuts and one cupful of cornflakes. Drop cakes on baking sheet and bake in a moderate oven.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

DOG DAYS

"MUZZLE that dog! The idea of letting a dog go about that way in these dog days!" And it was a "dog day."

Why do we call very hot days dog days? To be sure, in the summer, dogs are dangerous, and when people were not compelled to be as careful as they must be now to incapacitate them for doing harm, the hot days witnessed enough horrible accidents to earn the appellation. But that isn't how it started.

The ancients, with their myths and goddesses, were ardent devotees of astronomy. The planets were popularized, so that school children were familiar not only with this symbol, ism, but their physical changes. "Dog days" was the name given by the ancients to a period of about forty days at the time of the rise of Sirius, the planet called the Dog Star. This happened to be at the hottest time of the year, the star rising on July 1. On account of the changes of procession of the Equinoxes, the date has been brought down to about July 23.

Regardless of Sirius, we call them "dog days," if it is hot, and in cool weather we do not divert our attention from the strenuous life to astronomical problems. Yet the planet rises just the same.

BIG ENOUGH

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THERE'LL come a time, it won't be long,
When things begin to happen wrong:
When stockings start to disappear,
And other happenings as queer
Will make you wonder now and then
Where all your gloves are gone again.
You miss a certain underskirt,
And father's shouting for a shirt.
Yes, time rolls on, the day it brings
They're big enough to wear your things.

A father knows, if really wise,
The meaning then of family ties;
For time rolls on, the time it is
The family starts wearing his.
If now and then he misses one,
He'll likely find it on his son;
And even daughters have beeen known
To wear the ties that fathers own.
Yes, overshoes or dinner rings,
They're big enough to wear your things.

There comes a time when you declare
That Sonny's old enough to wear
A dinner coat; and you decide
To fill him full of joy and pride
With yours. But, when you go to seek
The coat, you hunt about a week,
And wonder where that coat is gone—
Then find that Sonny has it on.
They seldom wait till someone brings,
When big enough to wear your things.

And yet in this you often find
A comfort of another kind:
For children old enough to wear
Your clothes are old enough to share
A little of your burden, too—
And how I hope your children do!
When sons put on a man's attire,
When daughters wear a woman's geyer,
The man and woman that it brings
Are big enough to help with things.

As Told by Irvin S. Cobb

THERE'D BE AN UPRISING

THE revivalist was the mouthpiece of a new cult, an offshoot of an older denomination. In his interpretations of the Scriptures he saw no possible hope for any members of the human family who refused to accept his particular brand of religion, as distinguished from all the other brands.

Before an awe-struck congregation at a camp meeting he was describing what would come to pass with regard to those stiff-necked and perverse non-believers who were found outside his own fold on the day of judgment.

"My brethren," he clarioned, "there is no middle course. By the word of the Holy Writ I have proved to you that mankind either must take the true doctrine as it has been expounded here or accept the awful consequences. I can close my eyes and see the awful picture right now.

"Over there in shining robes stand the little group of the elect and the saved. And down below in the fiery pits of perdition millions of the unregenerate are roasting in the undying fires through all eternity while the minions of the devil heap hot coals upon their heads and give them molten lead when they beg for water to cool their parched tongues. That, my brethren, is what will come to pass."

From the body of the house a small elderly gentleman rose up.

"Excuse me for interruptin'," he said "but there ain't no chance fur sich a thing to happen. Why, the people jist natchelly wouldn't stand fur it."

SHOW-DOWN AND LOVE WINS

By HOMER B. KING

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

"O-O-O SENOR. It is again that dark woman who once more comes into your life. She—"

"Francişca, you—you darling! I love you!"

For a moment the girl sat rigid, the color ebbing from her cheeks. Slowly her great dark eyes lifted in a flashing glance that sent his blood racing.

"Francisca! Love—" he passionately whispered, leaning across the table. Gently she loosened his clasp.

"No! No! those are words—beautiful words what you call—flatterings, that Senor Dines speaks to Francisca. It must not be that I listen." He laughed softly and started to rise. "No! No! No, you must not!" she whispered, her eyes big with terror. "No, no, please. Senor, don't rise. See, we play again the fortune game. Francisca will once more tell—"

Dines glanced about the small adobe-walled room.

"We are alone, Francisca, and I love you! I am—"

"No! No!" she gasped, glancing toward an opening leading to a patio. "Listen!"

From the garden came the low thrum of a guitar.

"Please, senor, please sit—we—" Again terror filled her eyes and he glimpsed a shadow passing the garden opening. "Now," the girl laughed, nervously riffling a deck of cards, "we play the game—no? Just you and me—the Senor Jeem Dines and Francisca."

"What are you frightened of, dear?"

"Me? Fright?" she asked, keeping her eyes downcast. "Why should I be fright? This is my home. Nothing fright me."

Again Dines leaned toward her, his eyes flaming, his handsome face flushed.

"Francisca," he said softly. "I tell you I love you, you glorious, girl—I love you! Your eyes told me—"

She touched a finger to his lips; the guitar was playing so softly they could scarcely hear it. Again the girl forced a laugh.

"Come," she gayly cried, "will you play cards for big money? The Senor Dines, Americano, is rich. Francisca has nothing, so she play—" Her breath caught in a half sob, but she smiled and continued: "Yes, we play three times poker. Francisca bets first her hand for—for one kiss—against the Senor Dines' much money. Next, if Francisca lose, she will bet her—her—cheek—for one little one. If again she lose, she will bet her—her heart and—and—lips. No! No, I have not finished. This last bet is to be for much—much money. How you like this game?"

Neither noticed the guitar was still.

"Deal! Deal!" he cried. "One hand and the draw for each bet! See, first I make this pile against this little hand. This larger one for the rose cheek, and if I win all—everything for the last— Ah, but darling—already I have won the heart. Tell me, please—tell me I have won the heart, Francisca?"

"Look," she whispered, meeting his look for a fleeting second, "see I deal first you, then me, five cards. It is done! Now, it is what you call—cold hands. I take three and you two. Ah, you have the American luck—no?"

"I win! I win! Francisco, look! You can't beat love!"

His lips clung to her wrist in a kiss that turned her cheeks white. Breathlessly, silently he took the cards, riffling them with trembling fingers. Again they were dealt. Again she called for three and he two. Again he won!

"Please, please," she gasped as he leaped to his feet. "Not this time—not my cheek— See, I give again my hand for your kiss. If so you win the next—then—then—all, all—is yours—so please pardon?"

This time her eyes closed under the fiery kisses he pressed on her wrist and fingers.

"You deal!" he whispered huskily. "Look at me, Francisca! Please look up. Let me see your eyes. I love you—love you!"

Again and again she shuffled and cut the cards, her face white. Then lifting her eyes to his, pushed them toward him.

"Tell me, Francisca, tell me you—" he pleaded, cutting the cards.

"I deal," she said, "and this time it is everything—cheeks—heart—lips—me—against all your money. Yes, that is it! Now!"

In strained silence she dealt. Each glanced at their cards, and victory lighted his eyes.

"One!" he breathed.

She dealt to him and laid the deck aside.

"Francisca play these," she whispered.

"I've won!" he exulted. "Francisca, I told you you couldn't beat love. Look! Look! Four fives and an ace! See! Show! Show! It's a show-down You are afraid—ah, darling, you must not be afraid of me. I love you, dear—my love won't harm—it's a show-down! Come, let me see!"

"No! No! You mustn't! You! You!" her face was ghastly as she stared, terror stricken at the cards he had turned face up.

Laughing wildly, he caught her hands, holding both in one of his as he turned her cards face-up. His laugh died, the light left his eyes, his lips set grimly and for seconds he stared at the exposed hand, then at her.

"So?" he grated. "Four aces, and I have a fifth." He straightened, a sneer twisting his lips. "Your fingers slipped, didn't they—lost their cunning? Too bad, when the stakes were so big. Everyone told me you were a crook; that you'd get my money—that—well, there it is, but I'll—No, you don't."

He caught her, crushing her savagely to him, his lips pressing on hers. For an instant she lay still. The guitar twanged loudly, and twisting loose, she laughed in his face.

"So," she said passionately, "the big rich Americano calls Francisca a crook—a thief. What is he? The senor who comes to my home three, four times, then speaks love words, tries to buy with his Americano gold the Mexican girl's love? Is Francisca bigger thief than he? Bah! No! He cheat one way—Francisca laughs at him. See, this money I win by honest cheat—and I laugh and wipe his kiss away—like this!"

"Something the Senor Dines want?" inquired a soft, insinuating voice behind him.

Dines looked from the white-faced girl clutching at his money to the archway where stood a smiling old Mexican holding a guitar.

"You timed your entrance just right, Gonzalles," he laughed harshly. "You two make a good team. No, there's nothing I want except to get out of here. The money's yours—divide it! I'm lucky to get away so cheaply."

A block away from the high-walled old place, walking rapidly toward the brightly lighted main street with its rows of dance halls, saloons, gaming rooms and catch-alls, Dines stopped to look back—shrugged and went swiftly on. If what he had heard was really a shot and cry, it was none of his business; such things were common in this town. Cursing himself because of the ache in his throat, the pain at his heart, he walked quickly down the street to the gaming house where he told Bill Drum, his old foreman, to wait for him. A blare of music struck him as he pushed into the crowded room.

"Curse the place!" he muttered. "And I thought to find a lily here. It's to laugh!"

"Come on, Bill," he said, touching the old cattleman's shoulder.

Dunn's keen eyes flashed over him. "Wait till I cash in," he said, turning back to his game.

"Well," Dunn said a few minutes later as they walked to the stable for their horses, "I told you she'd get you."

"Cut the 'told you so's,' Bill! I've had all I want for one night."

"Hurts, eh? Well, I'm tickled 'tain't worse. You can't trust 'em, Jim. Once in a blue moon, maybe, you—what's up, Mex?"

A policeman stood before them.

"Senor Dines," he said, "one accident has come to Francisca Gonzalles. She is hurt at her house. Much she calls senor. The medico says if you—"

Dines heard no more. Brushing them aside he raced away, while Dunn, cursing his luck, followed.

He found her lying on her own bed, a doctor leaning over her.

"Jeem," she whispered, her great eyes filled with pain and love, "Jeem, you've come—I'm so happy. It is here—see all your money? I saved it all. I fool'd, cheat'd you, Jeem, but there was no other way. He, Gonzalles told me if I did not get it tonight he would rob—kill you. It was a show-down—my Jeem. I let you go, but I would not give it to him, then he fight, he try to kill me—but—Jeem—you won—heart—me—everything — lips—they are yours, Jeem."

She fell back, her eyes closing.

"Francisca! Love! Love! Look at me—open them! I love you! Come, you can't beat love—not even death!"

Her eyes fluttered open.

"Jeem—I not die—I make show-down and—love win."

Elephant Most Valued Animal in London Zoo

Giraffes are sold by the neck and hippopotami by the pound, annual stock taking of the animals at the London zoo has revealed, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine. Giraffes generally are worth about $2,500. The length of the neck is a determining factor because of the difficulties in shipping.

The largest hippopotamus at the London zoo is valued at $4,000, while the most valuable animal in the entire collection is an elephant which carries children on its back. Its worth is placed at $5,000. Lions average about $250 each, depending upon their size, age and disposition. Since tigers are more difficult to capture, they bring higher prices, ranging from $700 to $900. The rhinoceroses are valued next to the prize elephant, being worth about $4,500. All the animals at the zoo were estimated to be worth about $125,000.

Had to Travel Slowly

A well-known novelist was being entertained at a dinner in Hollywood, and was seated next to a popular actress, who, he observed, was somewhat elaborately painted and powdered. After professing a great admiration for his books, the fair one said coyly, "There is one question I would like to ask you. In that new novel of yours there was a phrase I couldn't quite understand. You said a 'blush crept slowly.'" "Well," said the writer, "if a blush tried to run nowadays it would kick up too much dust."

MOTORING AND VIOLETS

Along in the deep grass and by stones and through the woods were the members of the Violet family. They were some of the late violets and they were enjoying the air and welcoming eager visitors and having a good time.

The Fairy Wondrous Secrets.

And then such a funny piece of news came to them.

It was the Fairy Wondrous Secrets who came and told them the funny piece of news.

An automobile had gone flying by and some one in the automobile had said:

"There must be violets about here. Every one I see is carrying them.

"Oh, do let's see if we can't find some violets, too."

And the other person in the automobile had said:

"Oh, probably they're all picked. You don't see any growing, do you?"

Now that was what the Fairy Wondrous Secrets had heard and she had thought it funny, yet at the same time she had thought it a pity.

"Didn't they know," she said to the members of the Violet Family, "that through all the ages, in the poems that have been written about your family, in stories, in descriptions, you have always been known as the modest violets and the shrinking violets and the violet 'half hidden from the eye?'

"You have never been known as the bold violets, the violets that shrieked at passers by, the violets that stood way up to look at all who were hurrying along.

"They talked as though you might be sunflowers.

"It was funny. And yet, as I have said, I thought it a pity, too.

"For here they were, dashing so quickly through the country that they couldn't stop to enjoy the beauties along the way.

"They didn't know what was to be seen in the way of wood flowers, new ferns, shrubs, blossoms.

"They didn't take the time to get out and see what grew back in the woods a little, or what was down by a stream or to see the reflection in the brook.

"They went so quickly that those passengers in the car who would have liked to have seen something along the way saw hardly anything at all.

"At the end of the ride they would boast what a great number of miles they had traveled, and yet they had missed so much.

"Oh, dear," said Fairy Wondrous Secrets, "it really is a great, great pity.

"I shall have to get my Wonder Workers and we shall have to do up many packages of secrets and scatter them about.

"We'll have to let people know again that the beauties and the lovely things in life are not all to be found in a second.

"We'll have to tell them of the delights of coming upon a dear little family of violets, or of seeing a bird feeding its young, or of another bird singing.

"We'll have to tell them that there are some beauties that hide themselves shyly from the hurrying hustling world and only show themselves to those who quietly, lovingly seek them.

A Dear Little Family of Violets.

"Oh, yes," Fairy Wondrous Secrets added, "we'll have to get to work now."

Then the members of the Violet family talked among themselves of the people who hurried by so quickly that they couldn't see what there was to be seen, and who had almost grown to think that unless things were huge and standing so no one could miss them, they actually did not exist.

SIDE LINES

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

GILMORE was in the insurance business in a good-sized town where insurance had been worked very little. It was an excellent territory in which, with the proper effort, he could have made something worth while. As it was, he was doing well and accumulating a creditable bank account. He didn't wear himself out talking insurance; in fact, he got interested in a side line—Christmas cards and embossed stationery—and I used to think that he gave more time to his side line and showed more interest in it than he did in his main business.

When a prospect began to yawn a little and to grow restless under the insurance line that Gilmore handed out, he would introduce Christmas cards or the latest styles in writing paper and the uncertain insurance prospect would fall for what he considered the lesser evil and order a few cards. Gilmore finally gave so much time to his trifling side line that his insurance business went onto the rocks.

Baldwin was a lawyer, or at least that is what the gilded sign over his doorway indicated—"J. C. Baldwin, attorney at law," the legend said—but Baldwin was more devoted to his side lines than to the mysteries and intricacies of a legal practice. He was chairman of the social committee of the Country club, and that duty consumed a considerable part of his time. He was president of the village Rotary club, and did a lot of work on the board of trustees of the Presbyterian church, and held high offices in four or five secret and fraternal organizations of the town, and he was an active Republican. His main side line, if I may so denominate it, was his fraternity. In college Baldwin had developed the idea that the two great moral and political influences in the world were his fraternity and the Republican party. He allowed his wife to devote herself to politics while he looked after the fraternity. He was the high and mighty potentate of that organization and made long trips over the country and many inspirational talks, and did much eating at banquets given in his honor and much writing of papers. There is no doubt that Baldwin did a good work in these side lines, but in the meantime the law business suffered, and the financial returns from the side lines were quite inadequate to meet the family needs.

Mason, in college, is giving so much time to the side lines of society and athletics and religion and politics that he has little or no time for the real thing for which he came to college. He is so obsessed by the activities of college life that it is hard to persuade him that these are not of more importance even than his studies. If you ask him, I am sure he would admit that he is getting more out of the side lines of college than out of the real business.

He's wasting his time, as Gilmore and Baldwin are, but it's hard to make him see it.

BALBOA THEATER

The greatest pantomimic opportunities of her career are said to be offered Colleen Moore by her latest screen vehicle, "Ella Cinders," a John McCormick picturization of the newspaper comic strip, which will be presented at the Balboa Theatre all week commencing Sunday.

Surrounding Miss Moore is a cast headed by Lloyd Hughes, who has often been seen as her leading man, but apparently never often enough, judging by his great and growing popularity.

Alfred E. Green, who directed the star in her highly successful screen version of "Irene", likewise directed this latest ambitious vehicle.

An engagement of more than usual importance is the appearance in person of the O'Neill Sisters Kiddies Revue, a company of 40 professional children who sing and dance in a perfectly happy, natural way. The ambition of their little hearts is to some day grow up to be real persons on the stage.

The training of the O'Neill Kiddies is brought through a joyful cooperation between happy child and pleased teacher—both seeking after the one thing—success.

The summer program of the O'Neill Kiddies includes an act of brilliant in songs and dance, costumes and scenery. See them in the "Old Fashioned Dance", "Rose Marie", a score of clever specialties, "Gypsy Land", "Tiny Tiny and her Beau," and the spectacular closing number "The American Patrol".

George Stolberg and the Balboa Music Masters have arranged a harmonious program of popular musical numbers.

West Coast Pictorial News Reel, and other short reels complete the program.

CABRILLO THEATER

Mary Astor and Lloyd Hughes play the featured roles in 'High Steppers,' an Edwin Carewe production for First National. It comes to the Cabrillo Theatre Saturday.

The film is based on the popular Sir Philip Gibbs' novel, "Heirs Apparent." Edwin Carewe directed.

A new "vamp" comes to the screen in this picture in the person of Dolores del Rio, Castillian beauty, who is remembered for the distinction of her acting in "Joana," a recently released First National picture. She is considered one of the best movie "finds" of the year. Carewe introduced her to the screen. She is one of the wealthiest girls in Mexico and belongs to one of the most aristocratic families.

Musical Specialties played by Raymond Godden at the console, West Coast Current Kinograms and a good comedy round out the excellent bill offered Cabrillo patrons this week.

Please mention The Beach News in your dealings with the patrons of our advertising columns.

DON'T KNOW WHAT TO DO WITH "MODEL HOME"

The French nation has "the American model home" on its hands and doesn't know quite what to do with it. This model house, equipped with the most modern electric appliances, was shipped to France as a gift to Bienvenue Francaise, or "French Welcome" society of which Marshal Foch is the head. The society hoped to get the home erected this summer and expects to use it as a place within which to welcome all sorts of foreign visiting delegations but up to the present it has not been able to find a location in Paris that is suitable.

THE LAND OF MODERN MIRACLES

In the United States there are 16,500,000 telephones, 17,000,000 have pleasure cars, 16,000,000 have phonographs, and 6,000,000 have radios. Radio business this year is expected to reach $600,000,000, a gain of $100,000,000 over 1925.

JOAK STATION IS NO JOKE

Radio popularity is growing in Japan. Station J O A K in Tokyo, a station that is not so funny as its name might phonetically imply, since classical Japanese music and presentations by some of Japan's most famous people are often on the program, is able to broadcast to the whole of the flowery kingdom. Other stations are springing up also.

BETROTHAL NEWS ANNOUNCED IN NOVEL WAY AT BRIDGE TEA PARTY

The engagement is recorded of Miss Louise Annette Rust, daughter of Mrs. S. L. Rust, to Dr. Norris O. Cash of Santa Ana, which was told at an attractive bridge tea given Saturday, July 10, at the Torrey Pines Lodge, by the bride-elect's mother, Mrs. S. L. Rust and her sister, Mrs. Dan Dixon.

The announcement was made by little Idyleen Dixon, niece of Miss Rust, who, dressed as a tiny Indian maiden, presented each guest with an arrow from her quivver, which contained the bethrothal news. The little girl's costume was in keeping with the Indian motif featured in the appointments for the affair.

Miss Rust is a popular member of San Diego social sets, and is a graduate of the State College, and a member of the Komo sorority. Dr. Cash is a graduate of the Kansas State Agricultural College and is now practicing in Santa Ana, where the young couple will make their home after their marriage, which is to be solemnized this Saturday, July 17, at the home of Miss Rust's sister, Mrs. Dan Dixon, at "Dixon Acres," Point Loma.

Guests at the bridge party last week included only intimate friends and members of the Komo sorority, and were: Misses Louise Annette Rust, Margaret Julian, Merle Scates, Helen Tattersall, Margaret Adams, Gladys Hitt, May Davidson, Dorothy Harrison, Margaret Giles, Florence Cletus, Marian Giles, Maxine Murphy, Bernice Steele, Susan Lewis, Dorothy Davies, Elsie Moriarity, Bueta Banta, Mesdames Tom Williams, Dan Dixon, S. WEDDING SOLEMNIZED MID BEAUTIFUL SURROUNDINGS AT O. B. BAPTIST CHURCH

An exceptionally pretty wedding ceremony took place at the Ocean Beach Baptist church last Wednesday afternoon, July 14, when Miss Pearl Woodworth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Woodworth of Ocean Beach, became the bride of Rev. K. Owen White, son of Dr. Malcolm White, of Vernon, B. C., Canada. Two ministers officiated at the marriage, Rev. W. S. Dunn of Ocean Beach, and Rev. W. B. Pearson of Ventura, Calif. The bridal couple was attended by Ernest Sinclair of Santa Monica, as best man, and the bride's maids included Dorothy Dunn of Ocean Beach, and Kathryn Orr and Frances Miller, both of Los Angeles. The floral decorations of white and green were exquisitely arranged and the presentation of the wedding ring was decidedly novel. A dainty little miss carried a beautiful lily, in the folds of which were encased the nuptial circlet. At 2:30 p. m., just an hour after the marriage ceremony, dinner was served at the Alligator Rock Lodge to the bridal party and out-of-town invited guests. The bride is a graduate of the Mnual Training High school of Denver, Colo., and Los Angeles Bible Institute of California. The groom is a graduate of Los Angeles Bible Institute and the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary of Louisville, Ky. The newly-weds are on a honeymoon trip north and will later make their home at Ocean Park, Calif.

MAKES PUMPING UP TIRES UNNECESSARY

Chicago, Ill.—F. E. Hughes, Suite 553-F, 424 N. Norman avenue, of this city, has perfected a new air-tight valve cap that enables auto owners to pump up their tires once and never touch them again until punctured or worn out. Leading tire manufacturers, after thorough tests, have approved Mr. Hughes' invention and banished the old theory that air escapes through rubber. One inflation lasts the life of a tire, and tire mileage is doubled. These caps retail for $1.25 for set of five. The inventor wants agents and will send proof and sample free. Write him today.—adv.

RADIO

Dr. C. B. Jolliffe of the Radio Laboratory of the Bureau of Standards, With a 250-Watt and a Type "N" Electron Tube.

By DR. ALFRED N. GOLDSMITH

The quality of reproduction of music in the home depends on many elements at the transmitting and receiving stations. Acoustic synchronizing, or the accurate re-creation in the home of the sound waves produced in the studio, is the determining factor in the enjoyment of radio programs. Few people realize the very important part played by vacuum tubes in the receiving set.

From the standpoint of securing real musical results in the home tubes must meet a number of difficult specifications. While high-grade tubes do, as a matter of fact, meet such specifications, it is by no means uncommon to see the entire circle of broadcast transmission and reception broken and tone quality ruined by the use of unsuitable or unreliable vacuum tubes.

Considering, first, some of the electrical constants of the tubes and without going into the technical details of the matter, vacuum tubes have a certain characteristic which is known as the amplification factor. If the amplification of the tubes used in the receiver is too small, weak and unnatural sounding signals will result. If, on the other hand, the amplification is too great in its relation to the design of the receiving set, the receiver may "oscillate" or produce squealing or howling notes which cannot be conveniently eliminated or controlled.

Internal Impedance.

Another important constant is what is known as the "internal impedance" of the tube. Roughly speaking, this is a measure of the opposition of the tube to the flow of plate current through it. It is the factor which limits the current drawn from the "B" battery. If the internal impedance is too small there will be an excessive drain on the plate batteries without corresponding advantage and plate battery renewals will be uncomfortably frequent. On the other hand, if the internal impedance is too high, weak signals of unsatisfactory character will be produced and tone quality on the average loud speaker will be distinctly unsatisfactory. Accordingly, internal impedance of vacuum tubes must also be held within carefully considered limits.

The elements inside of modern vacuum tubes are close together, and they, in conjunction with the wires leading from them to the contact pins in the base of the tube, constitute what are known as electrical capacities. In other words, there are minature condensers formed by the filament, grid and plate, the capacities of such condensers residing inside of the tube. It is a fact that in many highly efficient circuits these internal tube capacities definitely influence the electrical behavior of the set. Receivers which are "neutralized" or "balanced" against tendency toward oscillation (howling) are necessarily so balanced for a particular tube. If the internal capacity of tubes varies too far receivers which would otherwise properly function will begin to produce uncontrollable noises, generally of a buzzing or whistling nature, whereupon the musical enjoyment of the audience is destroyed.

The Filament.

Inside the vacuum tube is a glowing element called the filament. It is a sort of reservoir from which streams a current of electricity in the form of a myriad of tiny electrical charges called electrons. These pass from the filament to the plate inside of the tube and their flow is definitely controlled by the grid element between the filament and the plate, which acts as a sort of electric valve, turning on and off the flow of current through the tube and presumably in accordance with the shape of the sound originally produced in the broadcast studio. This, in general terms, is the process whereby the original signal is reproduced in the home. It is clear that an essential portion of this process is the emission of a sufficiently copious stream of electrons from the filament. If the stream is reduced to a mere trickle the signals will become weak and distorted. In this case, even for a low volume of sound in the home, there will be rattles and distortions in tone quality.

Vacuum tubes used as amplifiers require a high vacuum. Unusual and apparently extravagant precautions must be taken to extract gases from the bulb and even from the metallic elements inside the tube and the very glass itself. The presence of gas in the tubes shortens its life and causes it to be "noisy."

The delicate elements inside of a vacuum tube, if jarred, will vibrate. Some makes of tubes are peculiarly sensitive to mechanical disturbance and easily produce a "ringing note" if the receiving set is touched or tapped. Particularly is this the case if the tube sockets are not effectively cushioned and elastically supported. Vacuum tubes which produce a loud and prolonged ringing note when tapped will not give the same satisfaction as "non-microphonic tubes" which are free from this defect. In any case the vacuum tube mounting should be appropriate.

Suitable Batteries.

A brief mention of the importance of suitable batteries in good condition in their relation to tone quality is pertinent. When the "A" or filament batteries of a receiver run too low the tubes will not light up fully and the signals, besides being weak, are frequently distorted or scratchy in quality. A run-down condition of the "B" or plate batteries similarly causes a noisy or weak signal with distorted quality, or may even give rise to disagreeable howling sounds. The "C" or grid battery also plays a great part in the production of high-quality music.

The best rule is to select reliable tubes, each suited for the particular purpose to which it is to be put in the receiver, and then not overwork these tubes nor neglect the upkeep of the batteries feeding the tubes.

RADIO WAVES

Place the heated soldering iron in an asbestos-lined preserving jar to keep it hot when working on your aerial.

To space turns evenly on coil tubes, guide the wires with a comb, being careful not to strip the insulation.

Antenna and ground leads to the set should be as far apart as possible. Keep one at right angles to the other if you can.

When the batteries are fully charged and the volume gives out, have tubes tested. They may need revivifying or replacing.

Ammonia or soda water, quickly applied, will prevent damage from acid dropped while taking a hydrometer reading of the "A" battery.

If your two-step amplifier as a whole causes distortion, try a .001 mfd. fixed condenser across the plate and grid of the last transformer or use a power tube in the last stage.

When the sealing wax at one of the binding post's clips on a "B" battery does not afford full coverage, melt a little of a stick of the wax to make the whole "B" battery envelope airtight.

Shielding of sensitive sets increases selectivity. Line the cabinet with copper or brass sheeting to keep unwanted energy from coils, but keep the shield out of the field of the radio-frequency instruments.

When your set won't tune to the short wave-lengths, try disconnecting the aerial at the point where it enters the house and using as an antenna the piece remaining. This cuts the fundamental wave-length of the antenna system, which also includes the ground.

Winding of Coils

To space wires on coils the correct distance, start the coil with thread and wire, at the same time applying considerably more tension to the wire than when no thread is used. After the coil is wound and the end of the wire fastened, the thread may be unwound.

ATTRACTIVE WOMEN

If You Would Be Attractive You Must Be Healthy

A beautiful woman is always admired. There are many types of beauty. But no woman can be truly beautiful unless she is healthy. Radiant vitality is always attractive however plain a woman's features may be.

Many a woman has found her health improved thru the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Weakness, loss of weight, and a pale complexion were a few of the things of which Mrs. J. C. Taylor of Box 211, Tallahassee, Florida, complained before she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. "I could not even sit down and talk to a friend for any length of time," she states, "I would forget what I was talking about and felt so blue." Mrs. Taylor is so pleased with the work of the Vegetable Compound that she keeps a bottle of it in the house at all times—and when it is empty, her husband makes sure that she has a new bottle. "I have regained my strength," Mrs. Taylor writes. "I can do all my housework now and I feel just fine."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from roots and herbs and has been growing in popularity among women for over fifty years.

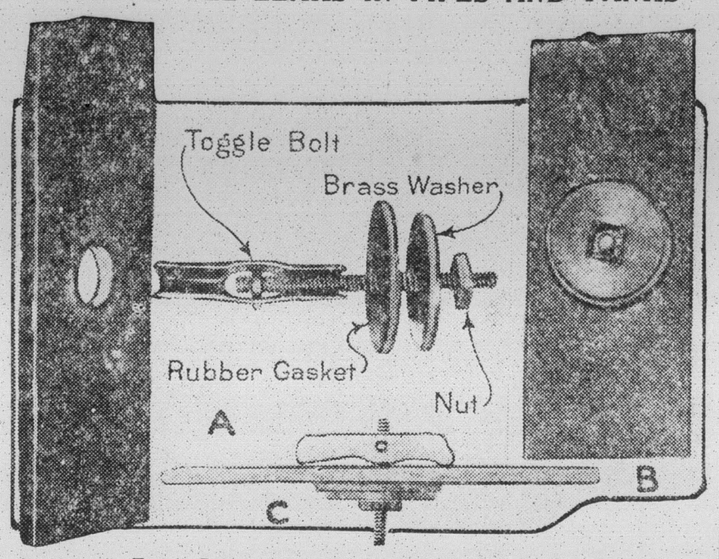
STOP SMALL LEAKS IN PIPES AND TANKS



A—How the Toggle Bolt Is Used; B—Outside of the Toggle Bolt; C—A Toggle Bolt for Repairing a Boiler.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A small leak in a water pipe can be stopped in emergency as follows, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, in Farmers' Bulletin 1460, "Simple Plumbing Repairs in the Home." Place a flat rubber or leather gasket over the leak and hammer a stiff piece of metal, such as a picture hook, to fit over the gasket; secure both to the pipe with a vise or clamp obtainable at hardware or five and ten-cent stores. A small leak under low pressure is sometimes stopped by embedding the pipe in richly mixed portland cement mortar. It is necessary to shut off the water from the pipe and build a boxing around it to hold the soft mortar closely against the pipe. Broken sewer pipe can be repaired in like manner. A wrapping of wire netting embedded in the mortar increases its tensile strength. A small hole in cast-iron pipe may be tapped with a screw plug.

Leaky Screw Joint.

Where a leaky screw joint cannot be tightened with a pipe wrench, the leak is sometimes stopped by a blunt chisel or calking tool and hammer. Sometimes a crack or hole is cleaned out and then plugged and calked with lead, tinfoil, or a commercial iron cement to the consistency of putty. Sometimes a pipe band with two bolts, or a split sleeve is employed to hold a thin coating of iron cement or a gasket over a leak. If the leak is at a screw joint, the band is usually coated inside with one-eighth inch of iron cement and then slipped over the pipe. Keeping the bolt farthest from the coupling or fitting a little tighter than the other, both bolts are tightened. During the tightening the band should be driven with a hammer snugly against the coupling or fitting.

In addition to these methods and devices, there are several kinds of good, inexpensive, ready-made pipe and joint repairers obtainable of manufacturers and dealers.

Leaky Spot in Tank.

A corroded and leaky spot in a steel tank or range boiler can be closed with an inexpensive repair bolt or plug obtainable from dealers. The picture shows a homemade repairer consisting of a three-sixteenths by three-inch toggle bolt costing ten cents and a flat rubber gasket, brass washer and nut. The link of the bolt, after being passed through the hole, takes an upright position, and screwing up the nut forces the gasket tightly against the outside of the boiler. A small hole must be reamed or enlarged with a round file to a diameter about five-eighths inch. The metal beneath the gasket should be firm and clean. A little candle wick packing may be wrapped around the bolt to prevent leakage along the bolt. Sometimes a hole is closed by driving in a tapered steel pin to turn the metal inward, forming a surface which can be tapped for an ordinary screw plug. A hole in the wall of a tank or pipe having considerable thickness can be easily and quickly closed by screwing in a tapered steel tap-plug which cuts and threads its way through the wall. These plugs in different sizes are obtainable of dealers, and a monkey wrench is the only tool required to insert them; it is unnecessary to shut off or drain the water from the tank or pipe.

A small leak at a seam or rivet can often be closed by merely rubbing a cold chisel along the beveled edge of the joint. Do not attempt to calk a seam unless the plates have considerable thickness and the rivets are closely spaced and are close to the calking edge, and then use extreme caution. Run a regular calking tool or blunt chisel along the beveled edge; tapping the tool very lightly with a light hammer, force the edge of the upper plate against and into the lower plate.

FRESH ASPARAGUS BEST FOR CANNING

"Hot-Pack" Method Favored for Vegetables.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If you have an abundance of tender, fresh asparagus in the garden you will undoubtedly want to can some of it for later use. As the asparagus ought to be canned as quickly as possible after it has been cut plan to do a little of this work frequently, rather than to attempt a large amount of canning at any one time. Use the pressure canner, and the "hot-pack" method, which is recommended for all vegetables and many fruits by the United States Department of Agriculture. The point about the "hot-pack" method is that the material to be canned is heated to the boiling point or cooked a short time before being put into the can or jars, so that in the shortest possible time the temperature of the whole jar is raised to the required point. This results in more certain sterilization and a better product because of the shorter cooking.

Asparagus may be canned whole, or cut up in half-inch lengths. In the former case it is tied in uniform bundles, cut to fit into the container to be used, and placed in a saucepan with boiling water over the tough lower portion. The saucepan is covered tightly and boiled 4 or 5 minutes, then the asparagus is packed rapidly into the containers. In the latter case the cut asparagus is brought to boil in water to cover, and then packed in jars or tins. The containers are completely filled up with boiling water, and each jar is salted in the proportion of 1 teaspoonful of salt to each quart canned.

The jars or cans are put into the hot canner as soon as they are filled and processed for 40 minutes at 10 pounds pressure, or 240 degrees Fahrenheit. Glass jars should have the springs and rubbers adjusted halfway, or screw tops placed on loosely. Tin cans are completely sealed before being placed in the canner. After processing for the required length of time, remove the containers from the canner. Seal glass jars at once. Place them out of drafts. Cool tin cans by plunging them in cold water. Keep all canned products under observation at room temperatures for at least a week. Discard any showing signs of spoilage and watch others of the same lot until it is certain that they are keeping.

Use of Pectin in Making Jellies Not Understood

The use of pectin in making jellies is not always understood. Pectin, sugar, and acid in the right proportions are necessary in making jelly. Adding pectin to the fruit juice may be helpful for several reasons. Delicious jelly can thus be made from the juice of peaches, cherries, strawberries, and other fruits that do not naturally contain enough pectin. Also the housekeeper can be more sure of success and of a jelly of just the right texture. Color and flavor, too, can sometimes be improved because the juice need not be boiled so long in order to reach the proper degree of concentration. The process is therefore, shortened and the housekeeper relieved from some of the hottest and most tedious part of jelly making by the right use of pectin extracts.

Pectin extracts should, however, be used only in relatively small quantities with rich full-flavored fruit juices to supply the lack of natural pectin. When pectin is added to watered juice to conceal their poor quality, the jelly has low food value and flavor.

Strawberry Sauce

A few strawberries can be made to go a long way by making a sauce as follows: Make a hard sauce from one third cupful of butter, one cupful of powdered sugar, and the stiffly beaten white of an egg. Crush two-thirds of a cupful of fresh strawberries and beat gradually into the hard sauce. This may be slightly warmed over hot water. The acidity of the berries may cause the sauce to separate somewhat, but this does not affect the flavor.

Vitamines and Minerals

Oranges are a rich source of vitamines and minerals. Children need a constant and abundant supply of these things in their food to help them grow and develop normally. Oranges also have the advantage that they can be given between meals without spoiling the appetite for other foods at the regular meal times. In fact they seem to sharpen rather than dull the appetite.

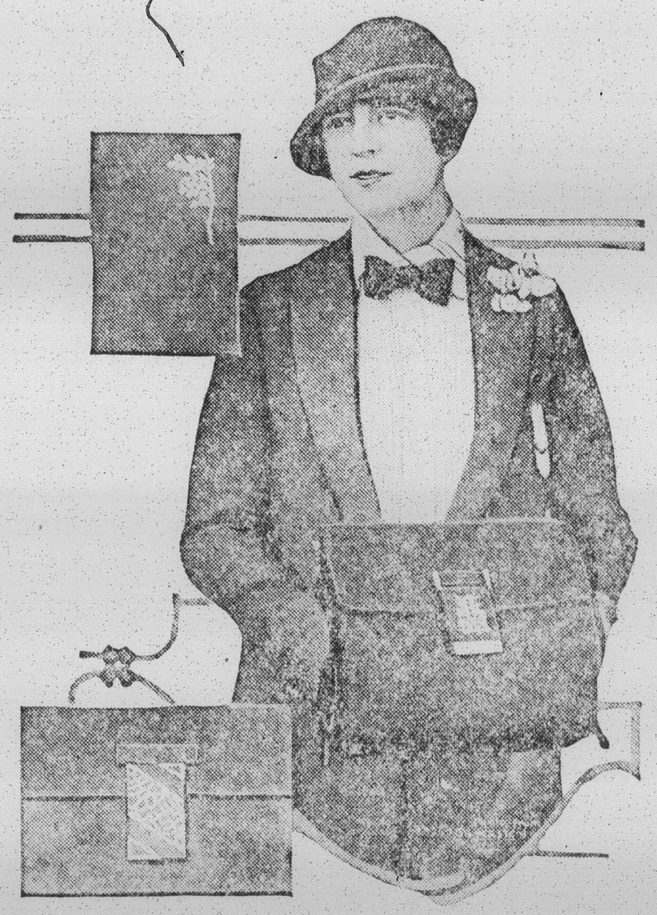
Buy Milk in Bottles

The best way of buying milk is in bottles. In this form it can be kept clean and cool more easily during delivery and is much more convenient to handle. Dipping milk from large cans and pouring it into customer's receptacles on the street exposes it to dusty air and is bad practice.

STYLES IN ACCESSORIES; SUPERB AIRY ENSEMBLES

MIDSUMMER is well supplied with pretty accessories, and by their means we can ring changes in our costumes and make two or three toilettes grow where but one grew before. But fashion is fastidious about the wearing of them—to proclaim our up-to-dateness we must obey her mandates. Better no little finishing touch than too many.

The scarf is the most popular and the most varied of dress accessories and is worn with tailored, afternoon or evening dresses and with sports clothes. It is made of light silks, sheer crepes and knitted weaves in silk fabrics and infinitely varied in design and colors. For wear with the tailored frock it is small, often vividly colored and worn like a man's muffler or tied up about the throat. It may be looped over at the front, or tied with a standing loop at one side, or simply wound about the neck and knotted at the side.



Some of the Latest Accessories.

For afternoon, scarfs grow longer and wider and expand into airy shawls for evening made of squares of chiffon or silk—the latter finished with wide borders of double chiffon, usually in a contrasting color. Gayly colored scarfs complete the white or one-color sports dress—and here the hat-and-scarf-to-match idea has many devotees.

Midsummer has brought in organdie vestees and plaited organdie collar and cuff sets, cape collars of net and lace and fichus of these airy materials, worn knotted at the front or in the "V" shaped front, terminating at the girdle. Pique vestees with tailored suits are smart. Also the boutonniere still flourishes in the scheme of neckwear things. After these come bags which may match some other item in the toilette. Reptile skin bags worn with shoes of the same finish off the tailored or the afternoon dress, or when black shoes are worn for afternoon the bag may correspond with the color of the stockings or match the hat in color.

Newly arrived bags of black velvet with rhinestone ornaments reach the apex of elegance and three of them are shown here. The stunning "muff bag" has a leather tab adorned with a rhinestone ornament. A very smart substitute for this ornament would be one of the fashionable jeweled monograms.

If colors have a meaning (there is hardly an "if" about it), but if they have, then yellow spells joyousness. When the sun shines and floods the world with gold there is summer in the heart of most of us mortals, and when he shines on the coral sands and they reveal their exquisite, rosy yellow, the heart of woman longs to perpetuate that delicate and wonderful shade. It has been captured for her and has inspired superb gowns and wraps in which the mode culminates its summer achievements. Then there is the beautiful pale-gold shade called "sunni," rivaling coral sand—and all those orange and tangerine yellows that have done so much for sports clothes.

"Coral sand" is the shade chosen for the handsome but airy ensemble in which the modes blossom out as shown in the picture. Georgette crepe and lace in the same color are combined to make it and it is a noteworthy summing up of the season's most successful style ideas. Here is the very short skirt, flared by means of godets of lace, having a scalloped edge and elaborated by embroidery on the panels and band at the hemline. And here are the "V" shaped neckline with embroidered band of crepe for a finish, ending in long ties, and the snug waist which fashion has adopted with so much enthusiasm; altogether they make a beautiful gown. The graceful cape is made of the same crepe and has a yoke of lace set in about the shoulders, ending in vandyke points. The flaring collar of crepe is soft and edged with a crepe ruching. Crepe makes the rosettes that finish the bottom of the cape and the long ties that fasten it.

A Handsome Airy Ensemble.

It would be a crime to wear a hat of less class than this ensemble wherever they are to go and the picture reveals a happy choice in headwear. It is a wide-brimmed picture hat of hair braid with a collar of velvet ribbon and two roses posed on the under brim.
